Administration

1. The city of Braila, with a population of approximately 107,000 was a Rumanian, Danubian harbor, center of the Braila Raion and located within the region of Galati. Braila included also the districts of Comorofca, Brailita, Nedelcu Gherea and Radu Negru, and was administered by the City People's Council (Sfatul Popular Raional) located on I.V. Stalin, a main artery of Braila.
2. The City People's Council, with an unknown number of members. was operated through various sections Industrial, Commercial, Education, Culture, and Radio, Financial, Personnel, Judicial, Housing, Health, Fishing, and Civics. The Industrial Section controlled all plants, factories, mills and other enterprises located within the city's limits. Although the City People's Council had the responsibility to control and organize all enterprises and institutions, this was actually done by the Party, which, through its City Committee (Comitetul Orasenesc de Partid), controlled, appointed, and supervised all leading personnel of the enterprises. The City People's Council merely executed Party orders.

Industry

3. Although Braila was a Danubian harbor, it also was an industrial city. It was the home of a large manufacturing plant, called Uzinele Progresul, which employed approximately 12,000 workers and manufactured locomotives, fast gunboats, and parts for heavy industrial equipment. Production figures, output, bottlenecks or origin of raw materials of the Uzinele Progresul were unknown. However, this plant operated Siemens Martin ovens. Braila also had two naval yards, a cement factory, at least two big lumber yards, a rice mill, a wire and nail factory, oil refineries, and candy manufacturing plants.

Health and Sanitation

4. The City People's Council of Braila initiated a so-called health checking drive, sending out special medical crews that visited all enterprises and schools, making X-rays, and giving shots to all workers and school pupils. The check was performed annually. Shots were given for typhoid fever and were mandatory. People who did not receive shots in the plants or enterprises were required to get them at the medical centers of the districts in which they resided. Braila had one civilian hospital and one polyclinic besides the six medical district centers. Twelve pharmacies supplied the city of Braila. For all workers employed in the production field, medical treatment and hospitalization were free of charge. Medication was free or given for a minimum fee. Self-employed people, or people in private employment, paid for medical treatments and hospitalization. Children, particularly infants, were checked almost monthly, or at the parents' request.

Security Control

5. The security control of the city of Braila was exercised by the militia and the security forces. Braila had about eight militia sections (Circumscripții de milite) with headquarters located in the downtown section. The militia headquarters had several sections such as: judicial, economic, traffic, records, vice bureaus, etc. Approximately 200 persons were employed within the Braila militia headquarters, while each militia section throughout the city employed up to ten people. One of the main jobs of the militia was to combat economic sabotage, while the security forces (Securitatea) were engaged in uncovering so-called political sabotage activities. The Braila Security Headquarters controlled the city as well as the Raion. A Security office existed in each village throughout the entire Braila Raion. [redacted] the number of security men, in Braila city alone, reached 150. But this figure did not include the informers or undercover agents, who existed in great numbers in all professions and walks of life. Braila was considered a border-crossing point (punct de frontiera) but only for ships. Security and customs checks of ships were performed not by border guard officials but by the harbor headquarters (Capitenia Portului). Because of smuggling through Braila Harbor, security control was tightened. Braila, however, was not considered a border area, (zona de frontiera) and people traveling to the city were not required to possess a special permit.
